DISKS and angular momentum

Think back to the conditions at \( z = 1000 \) when the CMB was observed. Was there much angular momentum in the universe?

The situation is quite different now. What do you think might have given disk galaxies their angular momentum?

A key component of formation of a disk galaxy is a quiet, merger-free environment. Why?